ABOUT

Families for Safe Streets confronts the preventable epidemic of traffic violence by advocating for life-saving changes and providing support to those who have been impacted by crashes.

This rapidly growing national movement lifts up the voices of those affected to give a face to this heart-wrenching crisis.

“I cannot overstate it: Families for Safe Streets... are among the most powerful advocacy forces I’ve ever seen in politics... If we want our streets to be safer, you really need the human beings who’ve lost loved ones. It reframes everything.”

Polly Trottenberg

Former NYC DOT Commissioner and USDOT Deputy Secretary

In Texas, an average of 10 people are killed in traffic crashes, every day.

In Texas, an average of 50 people are left with severe, life-altering injuries, every day.

It is hard to talk about, but also critically important to share the stories of those we have lost.

“No one should lose their life or get hurt just trying to get where they’re going.”
